

American Society for Cybernetics

The McCulloch Award of the American Society for Cybernetics is awarded to

Alexander Riegler

for his work promoting and developing Radical Constructivism, including founding the journal Constructivist Foundations.

Alexander Riegler has worked, for more than a decade, to promote Radical Constructivism, which the American Society for Cybernetics holds supports a key set of cybernetic concepts.

His concerted efforts to build a home base for Radical Constructivism has lead to the establishment of a variety of media and events, from celebrations and web sites via journal special issues and festschrifts to public lectures, resulting in the development of high level debate of understandings central to cybernetics.

This culminated in his founding, in 2005, of the quality e-journal, “Constructivist Foundations,” which he has edited since.

His award is a celebration of this achievement and service.
